Allison Koonin is the Chief Operating Officer of Bast Amron, where she leads firm wide operations, finance, technology, and business infrastructure. She brings a strong track record of scaling boutique professional services organizations through operational rigor, collaborative leadership, and strategic execution.

Allison has built her career guiding companies through transformation, modernization, and growth. She has overseen client operations supporting multi-billion-dollar asset bases, directed complex technology integrations across global teams, and designed operational systems that enhance performance, transparency, and accountability. Her experience spans asset management, global consulting, and professional services, where she has unified business functions, strengthened service delivery, and built institutional-grade frameworks that enable organizations to thrive.

Known for her disciplined, relationship-driven approach, Allison partners closely with leadership teams to optimize workflows, streamline decision-making, and create scalable processes that support long-term strategic goals. She is deeply committed to building environments where professionals can do their best work while maintaining the culture and values that define an organization.

At Bast Amron, Allison plays a central role in advancing the firm's operational maturity and supporting its continued national growth. She oversees the firm's internal infrastructure and works across all departments to ensure the systems, processes, and resources are aligned for sustained success.
