

The reason businesses and individuals spend so much time and effort memorializing the terms of their deals in advance is to guide them through the disagreements that may arise later. That is why the best business lawyers are those who understand litigation and insolvency. Who better to advise clients about agreements and business planning than lawyers who know how the disputes will unfold in court, understand how judges and juries will interpret the language, and can anticipate the risks and pitfalls of a bankruptcy filing by the other party.

Our Business practice brings together our multi-disciplinary backgrounds to give our clients sound advice that helps them focus on their business today, and avoid the costs and risks of litigation and bankruptcy later.
